Finding a job in the nonprofit sector requires a variety of strategies, including having a clear idea of what you want to do next so your search has sufficient focus; using your personal network of friends, colleagues, friends of friends, and colleagues of colleagues to identify organizations and openings that are worth investigating; and yes, reading the want ads, which now are primarily online via websites that list actual openings. Some of the best candidates for searches I've conducted have come to me via ads I've placed in periodicals or posted on websites.

The following websites specialize in openings in the nonprofit world:
